

2018 RAV4
0% APR for 60 months with $16.67 per $1,000 borrowed

SEE OFFERS
FIND A DEALER

TOYOTA

Option shown. View details.

PACCY11 & THE AVIANO COMMUNITY PET ADOPTION
Saturday, December 1, 2018
10am-3pm
40 RESCUE GROUPS ON SITE
ALL PETS SPAYED, NEUTERED AND IMMUNIZED

name holiday BUNDLE & SAVE
MINIATURE REINDEER 3 PIECE SET
$199
RETAIL $266

Headed at Sun-Subl. Quince 15147 N. Sun-Subl. Road 111 191 Sun-Subl. AZ 85141 P-855-811-6644
This website is not an internet.

Resiliency training helps youths avoid risky actions

Neer Patel
Quality Performance
Public Information

Over the past couple of years, ICAN has greatly expanded our life-skills training curriculum.

We reach 200 youths each day here at the ICAN building after school, but we realized that we could reach so many more if we take some of our curriculum into the schools.

One of those programs is our resiliency training.

Resiliency skills are a critical component of our life-skills training that we focus on at ICAN. The youths who attend ICAN predominantly live in poverty and require strong resiliency skills to avoid the risky behaviors that are prevalent in the community they live in — behavior like gang violence, juvenile delinquency and drug/alcohol abuse.

As you can imagine, these skills are critical for any youth growing up in today's society.

Our Community Programs team presented these skills to over 7,000 high school students last year. I recently sat in on one of these resiliency trainings, and, as a parent, I learned a lot of great techniques that I know will someday become valuable to my child.

That insight, our Community Programs manager, has a great way with the kids. He's very interactive and involved everyone in the room. I was amazed to watch him command a room of 20 persons and not only keep their attention but effortlessly receive their participation.

They talked about resiliency skills and what that means. Developing these skills now, long before they are needed (hopefully), it's so easy for a 12-year-old to say that they'll never vape or do drugs — not as much as a teen or young adult.

Building these skills and skills now will prepare these youths when the real temptations come. And that's through five techniques of resiliency:

- Stay in the moment; participate, act it with confidence.
- Never let them just say it, show it with body language and reinforce that confidence.

• Change It: Give a valid reason why you can't participate in order to quickly get out of the situation. "My mom can't let me home for dinner." "I'm meeting another friend." While this one is not out of a dangerous situation.

• Build It: This is about the relationship of the friendship. Don't put that person down or say they are terrible for their behavior. Be specific, voice your opinion — not only about why you don't want to participate, but give them reasons why it's a bad idea for them to participate. If the technique doesn't work, it might be time to end this relationship.

• Take action: Get out of the situation as quickly as you can. Make your decision, use the "change it" technique, and then LEAVE.

• Get help: All of the kids give examples of ways they could use these techniques. They were all making their friends with them, especially for the "change it" process. They loved coming up with scenarios.

It would have been easy for these kids to have a negative attitude for this kind of program, but they were great and I could see how hard their energy and interest in the topic being discussed. These are real-world situations — situations they have either been in already or may be in.

How incredible that they are now armed with skills to help them make positive decisions as they get older.

Resiliency is an incredibly important, but so are youth under the critical program. Life skills, using merchandise and resiliency skills can truly lead them on a better path to their future.

Shelby Pedersen is CEO of ICAN. Practice Programs for Youth in Chandler. For more resources on resiliency training: www.chandleraz.org/parenting/.

• Never let them just say it, show it with body language and reinforce that confidence.

azcentral.

ZG: Northeast Phoenix Republic

Page ZG1

- Terminally good eating

Page ZG2

- Things to do
- Gypsy Soul
- Santa Saturdays
- Welcome to the Desert Walks
- LIVE 101.5 Jingle Bash

Page ZG3

- Airport dining: Best places to eat

Page ZG4

- Airport

Page ZG6

- Man charged in 2017 homeless slaying

Navigation icons: back, forward, search, close.

Right sidebar: Browse, Pages, Index, Options, Editions, Search Archive, Help, E-Notify, Live News, Puzzles & Games, FR.

Resiliency training helps youths avoid risky actions

Your Turn
Shelby Pedersen
Guest columnist

Over the past couple of years, ICAN has greatly expanded our life-skills training into schools.

We reach 200 youths each day here at the ICAN building after school, but we realized that we could reach so many more if we take some of our curriculum into the schools.

One of those programs is our resiliency training.

Resiliency skills are a critical component of our life skills training that we focus on at ICAN. The youths who attend ICAN predominantly live in poverty and require strong resiliency skills to avoid the risky behaviors that are so prevalent in the community they live in — behaviors like gang violence, juvenile delinquency and drug/alcohol abuse.

As you can imagine, these skills are critical for any youth growing up in today's society.

Our Community Programs team presented these skills to over 7,500 high school students last year. I recently sat in on one of these resiliency trainings, and, as a parent, I learned a lot of great techniques that I know will someday become valuable to my family.

Ted Huntington, our Community Programs manager, has a great way with the kids. He's very interactive and involved everyone in the room. I was amazed to watch him command a room of 50 preteens and not only keep their attention but effortlessly receive their participation.

They talked about resiliency skills and what that means, developing these skills now, long before they are needed (hopefully). It's so easy for a 13-year-old to say that they'll never vape or do drugs — not so much in a year or two.

Instilling these ideas and skills now will prepare these youths when the real temptations come. Ted talked through five techniques of resiliency:

» Say it: Say no, refuse to participate; say it with confidence.

» Show it: Don't just say it, show it with body language and reinforce that

It's so easy for a 13-year-old to say that they'll never vape or do drugs — not so much in a year or two.

confidence.

» Change it: Give a valid reason why you can't participate in order to quickly get out of the situation — "My mom expects me home for dinner," "I'm meeting another friend"; white lies are fine to get out of a dangerous situation.

» Build it: This is about the relationship of the friendship. Don't put that person down or say they are terrible for their behavior. Be respectful, voice your opinion — not only about why you don't want to participate, but give them reasons why it's a bad idea for them to participate. If this technique doesn't work, it might be time to end this relationship.

» Take action: Get out of the situation as quickly as you can. Make your decision, use the "change it" technique, and then LEAVE.

Ted had all of the kids give examples of ways they could use these techniques. They were all raising their hands with ideas, especially for the "change it" process. They loved coming up with excuses!

It would have been easy for these kids to have a negative attitude for this kind of program, but they were great and I could see, firsthand, their energy and interest in the topics being discussed. These are real-world situations — situations they have either been in already or soon will be.

How incredible that they are now armed with skills to help them make positive decisions as they get older.

Academics are incredibly important, but as our youth enter the critical pre-teen phase, life skills, coping mechanisms and resiliency skills can truly lead them on a better path to their future.

Shelby Pedersen is CEO of ICAN: Positive Programs for Youth in Chandler. For more resources on resiliency training: www.childtrends.org/publications/positive-mental-health-resilience.

Restore

experience blissful luxury in the tranquility of your own home. This is massage. This is heaven.

INADA
The World's Best Massage Chair
DreamWave®
Massage Chair

Qi SE Massage Chair

Human Touch® Novo XT

COME IN. HAVE A SEAT. CHANGE YOUR LIFE.

MESA

Dana Park
1744 S. Val Vista Dr.
480.361.6121

PHOENIX

Uptown Plaza
100 E. Camelback Rd.
602.277.7989

SCOTTSDALE

The Shops at Zocallo
15435 N. Scottsdale Rd.
480.483.0818

RELAX THE BACK®
www.relaxtheback.com

TEMPUR-PEDIC
ELITE RETAILER